To The Citizens of Coleman

Russian Film "Moscow Strikes Back" To Be Shown At Palace Theatre On Tuesday And Wednesday

Box Office Receipts to be Donated To Aid To Russia Fund; Matinees Tuesday at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m.

On Thursday evening through the courtesy of Wm. Cole, proprietor of the Pass theatres, 25 citizens from each of the Pass towns were privileged to attend a preview of the Russian film "Moscow Strikes Back".

The film depicts the gallant and courageous fight which the Russian people are putting forth in the cause for freedom. It shows Russia before the war with large parades in the famous Red Square, Moscow in the winter of 1941-42 is shown under war conditions with the Nazis only 12 1/2 miles from the city. Stalin and his generals are shown addressing the population. Then comes the command to attack and the Russian armies are shown in action. Action on land and in the air is depicted as one town after another is captured in the Russians' first winter drive.

Shown are Nazis in the act of being captured and nearby are atrocities committed on the Russian civilians by the Nazis "Supermen". Heaps of dead are shown of babies, mothers and people. It is at this point the audience notices the difference in clothing worn by the opposing forces. The Russians appear to be warmly clothed while the Nazi stand shivering in the Russian winter weather.

Many pitiful scenes are witnessed as the Russians re-occupy town after town. Canadians should make it a point to see this picture in order to realize that the war has really not affected them to any serious degree in comparison to the suffering and torture suffered by their Russian allies.

Entire proceeds from the showing of this film will be donated to the Aid to Russia fund to help the poor people of Russia get adequate food, clothing and medical supplies. Elsewhere in this issue is an appeal from Mayor Antrobus urging all local citizens to attend this picture's showing on Tuesday and Wednesday, Jan. 22 and 23 at the Palace Theatre. If you are unable to attend the show do not fail to buy a ticket.

Local Taxi And Locomotive In Collision

Accident Occurred at Hillcrest Crossing; No one Injured; Car Badly Smashed.

Icy road conditions are said to have been the cause of a bad accident which occurred at the Hillcrest railroad crossing at 12.15 p.m. Sunday when the taxi driven by Lou Clara and a C.P.R. engine collided.

Mr. Clara was taking a passenger to Hillcrest and was travelling down the steep incline towards the railroad crossing. As he was nearing it he noticed the approach of the engine. He applied his brakes but the tires failed to get traction on the icy hill and the car started to swerve. Seeing that to swerve more would cause him to be hit "dead on" he gave the car the gas and tried to get as far across the track as possible before being hit. Fortunately the car responded as it did for the engine caught the back half and crushed a considerable portion of it before throwing it off the track to the side of the road. Mr. Clara suffered some body bruises and a bruised arm while the passenger is said to have suffered a bruised knee.

As a result of the accident the children at Sentinel, who are brought daily to the local schools by Mr. Clara were unable to attend school on Monday. Mr. Clara secured another car on Tuesday and has resumed his taxi business.

PASS MINE BUS AGAIN OPERATING

The bus service for workers at the Greenhill mine from Hillcrest has been resumed by John Ferstay. A wire recently received from A. H. Rymes, Regina, regional director of transit control, was followed by a resumption of the bus service.

This settled, at least temporarily, a ten-day dispute between the miners and the bus operator, who claimed he must raise the cost of transportation from $4 a month to $6.

The wire which was received by Enoch Williams, Blairmore's mayor, stated "by authority of order in council Ferstay is required to provide motor bus service to essential mine workers at once."

The communication further stated that any discussion of fares is of secondary importance.

ECONOMIC CONTRIBUTION OF CANADA TOWARD CONDUCT OF WAR NOTABLE ACHIEVEMENT

Ottawa. The economic historian of the future may well single out the transformation of the Canadian economy as one of the most striking features of the (war) period, the Dominion bureau of statistics said.

The bureau, using figures previously made public by the munitions department, said the annual rate of war production in Canada during 1942 is forecast at $3,700,000,000 compared with $2,600,000,000 in 1941 and $1,200,000,000 in 1940.

In addition, the metals, foodstuffs and other products to be exported to the United States and empire countries this year have been estimated at $850,000,000.

(Munitions department and national selective service officials have said war-production employment is expected to reach a peak of around 1,100,000 this year, about 100,000 more than at present employed. Thus, with an increase in war industry employment of about 10 per cent., production is expected to increase about 42 per cent.)

"Measured by any standard, Canada's economic contribution toward the conduct of the war during the year ended (1942) must be characterized as a notable achievement," the bureau of statistics said in its monthly review of business statistics.

The rapidity of the expansion since the outbreak of hostilities and the ever-increasing volume of production strains the imagination. Canadian production had been adjusted to the strategic requirements of war, and Canada, in recognition of its important role, was represented on the production and resources board maintained jointly by Britain, the United States and Canada.

Germany Faced With Shortage Of Manpower

Stockholm.—Faced with mounting casualties and growing demands on new fronts, the Germans are making a stern effort to mobilize every available reserve by mustering into the army men previously rejected for military service, reliable diplomatic sources said.

A commission of high German army officers, these sources declared, is touring the Reich to comb out the last of the country's manpower—men previously pronounced unfit for active service for slight disabilities but who could be used as garrison troops in occupied countries or for desk work, thus releasing more able-bodied men for the front.

The Germans were said by these sources to be counting on this program to yield 2,000,000 men.

Observers pointed out, however, that the induction of these men into the armed forces would confront labor dictator Fritz Sauckel—already hard-pressed to find trained workers for important war industries—with a gigantic task of finding replacements in occupied lands.

Sauckel has a large staff of officials recruiting help from all Europe.

According to German announcements, 700,000 men already have been transported from the Ukraine to work in Germany's factories and on her farms.

Meanwhile reports in German newspapers and despatches from Swedish correspondents in Berlin indicate that conditions are becoming harder from day to day for the people on the German home front.

More and more plants are being converted from the production of goods for civilian consumption to the manufacture of war materials. It was reported reliably that last fall only 20 per cent. of the country's industrial capacity was producing peace-time goods.

Even the firm which has been manufacturing Nazi party flags and decorations for party affairs has been involved in the turnover and now is making camouflage materials—for which unrelenting British aerial assaults have created a great demand.

Shortages consequently are being felt more keenly in every line. While new clothing ration cards are being issued, the German press has warned the public to use them sparingly, and it will be possible to purchase a new suit only in case of "urgent necessity."

GETS NEW POST

Sir William James Now Chief Of Naval Information

London.—Admiral Sir William James, called "Bubbles," because as a child he posed for Sir John Everett Millais' painting of a little boy blowing soap bubbles, was appointed to the new post of chief of naval information.

The appointment indicated the admiralty was further relaxing its traditional position as the silent service. Official circles said there was a feeling among the people that they ought to be told more about the achievements of the Royal navy and the merchant marine.

The painting for which Sir William posed is known to all Britons—who have seen it on billboards advertising a soap.

HONOR CANADIANS

Two Pilots Posthumously Awarded The Czechoslovak Military Cross. London.—The London Gazette announced that two Canadians in the R.A.F. have been posthumously awarded the Czechoslovak Military Cross.

They were Acting Sqdn. Ldr. Robert Clare Bissett, D.F.C. and bar, of Edmonton, who has died, and Wing Cmdr. Mark Henry Brown of Glenboro, Man., D.F.C. and bar, who was killed in action in the Middle East in 1941. Brown was one of the R.A.F.'s outstanding fighter aces with at least 18 planes to his credit.

POST-WAR SECURITY

OTTAWA.—A noted economist, John Gowan Parker, believes that this country's economy can finance a post-war federal debt of 10 billion dollars. Parker says he has no fear for Canada. The Dominion's national debt, he says, is one of the best securities which will exist in the post-war era.

APPOINTMENT

Harold MacMillan, 48-year-old British under-secretary of colonies, has been named resident minister to serve in an advisory capacity with the Allied commander in North Africa. Lieut.-Gen. D. Eisenhower. He will report developments directly to Prime Minister Churchill.

LOWER DRAFT AGE

Women In Britain Liable For Call At Nineteen

London. The King signed a proclamation lowering from 20 to 19 the age at which women are liable to be drafted for national service.

Single women born between July 1, 1922, and Dec. 31, 1923, will have the privilege of choosing between work in war industry and the uniformed services, or they may volunteer for nursing before being called up.

The proclamation also extended the operation of the service act to men who have reached 18 and are not 46.

FARM LABOR SURVEY

Winnipeg.—Hon. Douglas Campbell, Manitoba minister of agriculture, announced a survey of farm labor needs in the province will be undertaken in co-operation with municipalities with the object of increasing farm production this year. Details of the survey will be announced in about 10 days, he said.

BASIC INDUSTRY

Wants Agriculturists To Have A Voice In Parliament

Saskatoon.—"Put agriculturists in to represent agriculturists in parliament and on all boards and committees dealing with agriculture," J. C. Mitchell, president, declared during his report to the 22nd annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Field Husbandry Association.

"Has agriculture been neglected because we do not strike or is it because our representatives have other more personal matters than those pertaining to agriculture and have failed to grasp the grave situation of our basic industry?" he asked. "With no disrespect intended toward our present representatives, this situation is what you get when you are represented by doctors and lawyers in parliament who are wished on to you as members of boards and agricultural committees."

"The questions of the peace are of supreme importance to agriculturists for we want and need a new deal, a square deal, a permanent agriculture—not a consideration of our affairs after most other things are settled," he declared.

IMMIGRATION

Will Be Major Issue In Australia After The War

Canberra.—Encouragement of desirable immigrants to Australia after the war will be one of the major items of the government's reconstruction policy, it was disclosed.

Official quarters revealed that plans include a drive to boost the population to 20,000,000 within the next 15 to 20 years. (The 1939 population of the commonwealth was 6,960,884.)

Immigration by Britons, northern Europeans and Americans will be encouraged, it was indicated.

BUY CERTIFICATES

London.—The two young princesses have started the ball rolling in the sale of Britain's new war savings certificates. Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose bought the first and second of the certificates at a village post office near where they're staying. Each princess handed over a pound sterling for the securities.

GERMANY ATTEMPTS TO KEEP ALLIED BROADCASTS FROM REACHING THE PEOPLE

London.—Germany opened a new radio jamming war in an attempt to keep neutral and Allied broadcasts telling of its mounting military and political troubles, from Germans who listen to foreign programs at the risk of their lives.

Neutral news broadcasts, from such countries as Switzerland and Sweden, were first to encounter the German jamming efforts.

Then the jamming extended to the British wireless, which started using low speed Morse code for some news broadcasts, repeating each word twice, in order to get through.

A wave of arrests which had swept through southeastern satellite Europe was extended to France and to Germany itself.

A Berlin broadcast announced that "a gang of 27 criminals" had been arrested there, 23 of them foreigners. Germany reported that Vichy police under personal charge of Rene Bousquet, secretary-general of police in the cabinet, were "wiping out the Marseilles underworld."

Marseilles, the big French Mediterranean port, is now a German prohibited zone, used for reinforcement of Axis forces in Sicily and Africa.

Germans revealed also that apparently as part of this new campaign to get rid of possible dissident elements, the demobilization of the personnel of the "former French fleet" at Toulon, the Mediterranean naval base, was "making quick progress."

Twenty-five thousand demobilized naval officers and men already have left Toulon for their homes," Berlin said.

A Swiss broadcast reported that the municipal council of the industrial city of Lyons, key town in inland southeastern France, had been dismissed, and that a Lyons university professor had been put in charge of municipal administrative affairs.

Stockholm reported that in Budapest 73 men had been arrested as members of a secret political organization formed by opposition parties.

German broadcasts said a Hungarian court martial had sentenced three members of the forbidden religious sect "Witnesses of the Lord Jehovah" to death and 52 to terms of imprisonment ranging from six months to life, but that the death sentences had been commuted to life imprisonment.

Swiss advices said Hungary was anxious over the visit to Hitler of Marshal Ion Antonescu, Rumanian dictator, believing the meeting was directed against it.

"Well informed quarters in Budapest forecast far-reaching German demands against Hungary and they fear territorial claims at Hungary's expense, it was said.

Rome reported that Laval, Vichy puppet dictator, had reached an agreement with Marcel Deat, Paris collaborationist leader, by which Deat would be permitted to organize a political body in formally occupied France similar to the Vichy Legion. The idea was to merge the organization later, Rome said, as a national party.

FOR BEST RESULTS

Good Rationing Is Very Necessary For Farm Animals

Saskatoon.—Profitable production from farm animals was dependent upon various factors, not the least of which was the use of adequate yet economical rations, Prof. J. W. G. MacEwan, department of animal husbandry at the university, said in his address at the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Agricultural College Graduates' Association.

Good rationing, he stated, meant giving an animal what it needed to accomplish the task set for it. Quantity was one requirement, quality another. It was undoubtedly the case in some quarters that animals with full stomachs were literally starving.

The "newer knowledge" of nutrition seemed to revolve around minerals and vitamins, Prof. MacEwan said. Carbohydrates and fats would furnish fuel and energy while food protein would furnish muscle-building material, but it was increasingly clear that there were many other food factors involved in the adequate ration.

METHODS USED BY NAZIS TO GET INFORMATION FROM BRITISH PRISONERS OF WAR

London.—Persuasion, playing on human weaknesses, and direct terrorism bordering on straight gangsterism, are among a dozen different methods employed by the Germans to trick British prisoners of war into giving away vital military information.

How the Axis attempts to confuse and trap prisoners into making statements is described in a pamphlet just issued to British troops. To all tricks there is only one answer—silence.

If captured German and Italian orders are a criterion, the Tommies are doing a pretty good job of keeping their lips buttoned, even in the face of third degree methods. The Italians, for instance held up British silence as an example to their own troops.

A captured German document referring to Middle East prisoners as the "silent service," said:

"As a prisoner the Englishman is arrogant, proud, cautious and absolutely secure. When himself a prisoner he counts upon German justice and correctness and usually behaves towards his own prisoners in a correct and fair manner. Experiences to the contrary should, perhaps, be considered exceptions."

The pamphlet cited the following as examples of Axis interrogation:

Provocation method: the prisoner is treated contemptuously as a person of the smallest importance. "We know so much there is nothing you can tell me," says the German interrogation officer.

If the prisoner is a non-commissioned officer, the officer adds: "there is little a person such as yourself can tell me," if the prisoner is silent he continues: "I can't imagine why you were promoted. All I want is confirmation of a simple little thing I already know. You must be a complete fool." (Vanity is relied upon to provoke the prisoner into talking.)

Melodramatic method: The prisoner is marched into a room or tent lit by one flickering lantern. The interrogating officer at first pretends not to notice the prisoner.

Suddenly he looks up. "Your name?" when he has name, rank and number and the next question is greeted with silence, he orders the sentry to leave the tent. He looks pointedly at his revolver, placed like a stage prop on the table.

"I don't want to resort to methods we dislike," he says, and waits for the threat to work.

Third degree method: The prisoner is taken into a confined space such as an armoured car. The interrogating officer speaks calmly.

"You are alone," he says. "You have a family. I dare say you hope to live. It is nice to be a hero when someone knows about it. But you are alone."

"Shout and no one will hear you and if they do they will not worry. I am not concerned with what you are fighting for—and if you are dead you will care still less. I intend to get what I want."

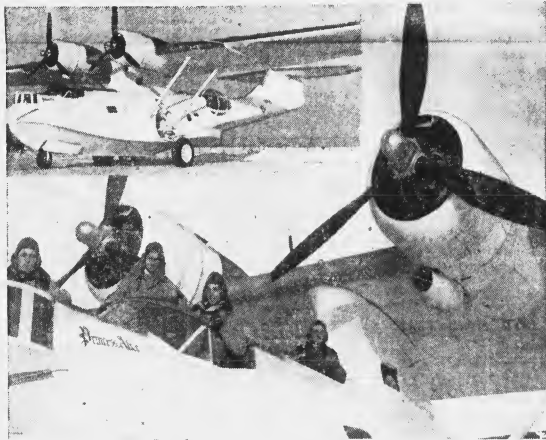

So the argument goes on. The note of death is constantly repeated. "Who would know?"

Marching method: To break their morale, British prisoners in Libya were forced to march a strenuous 17 miles. Weary men would be told to "bed down." As soon as they did so they were made to march again. They were confined to a very small area with practically no shelter and the minimum of food and water. At the end of all this they were questioned.

The British answer to these methods is provided by a captured order of the day, issued by General Euse Navarini, commander of the Italian 21st corps. It said: "When subject to questioning by our intelligence branch all the enemy prisoners refused firmly and categorically to give any military information of any kind whatsoever. They confined themselves to providing personal particulars and army numbers."

LONDON, (CP)—Hitler's quelling government in occupied Norway has deprived 189 Norwegians living abroad, in the British Isles and in America, of their Norwegian citizenship, "because of their hostile attitude toward the Norwegian state."

We can well understand De Gaulle's anger at having Dorian placed in high command in North Africa. The Admiral is one of the Vichy men who sentenced De Gaulle to death as a traitor, but if the Americans can make use of him it would be foolish to stand in the way. NOTES AND COMMENTS

Combating the Cold Spell

As this is written the outside temperature is 30 degrees below zero, a slight improvement over Sunday morning's 42 below. A few degrees more or less makes little difference, once you become accustomed to Arctic weather. The office temperature is holding steadily at 50 degrees, so we wear a sweater or two and thick socks. Things generally are cold. If you do not bring in the morning milk from the doorstep as soon as it is left by the milkman, you will find it is just a chunk and a cracked bottle. Which reminds us that years ago in England they used to tell the school children that it was so cold in Canada that the milk was delivered in frozen blocks. We now know how this impression originated.

Despite such low temperature, the sun shines, and trains, buses and transport trucks continue to travel. Even airplanes at the R.C.A.F. training schools take to the air, their exhausts making a peculiar cracking noise in the frosty atmosphere. Pilots learning to fly in this western country, which offers a variety of weather conditions unequalled anywhere, should be able to fly anywhere in the world.

Reflecting on how to combat the cold and what to write in this "kolyum," we suddenly spy a copy of Prime Minister Mackenzie King's broadcast on Temperance. Reading it doesn't help to raise the temperature, though in the Army and elsewhere rum is considered a mighty good thing to stimulate some heat, to arouse a little enthusiasm. On a cold frosty morning the study of the prime minister's address is not conducive towards generating heat, therefore we put it aside. There is a paragraph though which catches our eye and is worthy of mention:

"Few would venture to deny the advantages of temperance in increasing the efficiency of a nation at war. Yet many hesitate to advocate its benefits and to set the necessary example. As we all know, many persons, young and old, accept stimulants merely because they think it is expected of them. They do not wish to occasion embarrassment to others by a refusal to take what is offered to them by way of hospitality. To most sensitive natures, it requires much more courage not to yield to some social habits, or fashion, or custom, than it does to face physical danger and peril. The highest chivalry always demands consideration of the feelings of others. A change of attitude in some things at a time of war might even be made to constitute a new code of honor."

"We Are Not Alone"

Reports of annual meetings of Red Cross branches in the towns of the province, as gleaned from weekly newspapers, indicate that these are attended by very few people. The same applies to annual meetings of ratepayers. The Lacombe Globe states:

"The vernacular of the street—Let George Do It—was never more evident than at the annual public meeting of Lacombe Red Cross branch held last Monday night. Although due advertising was given this important annual event, the large (?) number of ten people turned out to find out what they could do to help along this splendid work."

There is a general disinclination of people to attend meetings. Listening to statistics and financial reports it is admitted is not particularly interesting, yet much time is given by those who keep the records and see that every dollar subscribed is accounted for, while faithful women meet weekly to sew and make up parcels.

Then, when these people make up reports of work done, money subscribed, and all other work done during the year, too often it is just themselves who are present at the annual meeting. In the face of lack of interest on the part of the general public, they continue to carry on. Verily virtue is its own reward.

The very least that the general public can do is to see that when the appeal for funds is made, that they remember that the money they may give has been more than equalled many times over by the time and effort of bands of women throughout the land whose work is carried on week after week so that Red Cross supplies may go forward in a steady stream to army and civilian hospitals and war stricken people.

Keep Your War Bonds and Certificates

Your money invested in Victory Bonds or War Savings Certificates should serve for the duration. Some people, not being able to resist temptation to cash in because they see something they would like to buy, are really not helping the war effort. To buy a war bond in order to be with the crowd, and then sell it a few weeks later, is not playing the game. In fact it is a mild form of desertion — an action which a person would be ashamed of unless dire necessity made it imperative that he should cash in.

To say that you cannot afford to keep up payments, if purchased on the instalment plan, is not sufficient excuse. Even though it may entail sacrificing some pleasure, or even something that has been essential in your daily living, it will stiffen your own morale to do without it in order to make good your promise to pay.

Also Received Nice Letter
From Mrs. W. S. Bosworth
Thanking Him for His Aid in Shipping Magazines

Recently Mr. Joe Plante has received a regular flood of letters from members of the Coleman Junior Red Cross thanking him for his courtesy in taking the boxes of magazines from Antrobus' store to the depot.

Eighteen members of the Red Cross wrote him letters of which the following is a typical example:
Coleman, Alberta,
Dec. 10, 1942.

Mr. J. Plante,

Coleman, Alberta.

Dear Mr. Plante,

Mrs. Antrobus and the Junior Red Cross members greatly appreciate your kind deed in taking the magazines from Mrs. Antrobus' and for nothing.

I remain, Yours sincerely,

Virginia Petrunick

He also received a letter of thanks from a former local citizen, Mrs. W. S. Bosworth, who is very much interested in the magazine depot at Halifax and has given much of her time to distribution of these magazines. The letter reads:

2 Orde St., Toronto, Ont.
Jan. 5, 1943.

Dear Joe:—

I have been hearing some very nice things about you—Mrs. Antrobus tells me of the wonderful work you do in carting magazines for the men in the Forces, which she ships to Halifax to be distributed amongst the men.

Sometimes no doubt you may think it a lot of work and bother, but you will never know, Joe, just how much these magazines are appreciated by these men, especially the men on the Sea for weeks and weeks—nothing to do and reading helps them pass the time. For nearly a year I was in Halifax with the Navy League Club where I saw and heard the men—the Merchant Seamen—tell of their experiences—how late at night they would come to me for something to read and I always tried to have something for them. They are grand fellows and they are doing a wonderful job.

The magazines go to the soldiers and airmen as well as all over everywhere—they are even shipping bundles to Great Britain now, to Newfoundland and everywhere they are needed, so your work goes far and wide.

You people away out there away from the ocean do not realize hardly what is going on in the sea ports, especially Halifax — but anything you can do to help the cause along is certainly worth while and I want you to know I have often told them in the East of the work done in Coleman.

I have a very warm spot in my heart for Coleman even if it has some funny things about it. But I had a good time there and enjoyed it. I like the West much better than the East and hope to come back some day when the "walking" is better.

I work with the Navy League here too when I have time, but it is not the same as being right on the spot where the men are. Well, Joe, I thought this little note might help you along a bit—when the load seems heavy you will know it is for those poor men on the sea who need them. Very kindest regards and good wishes for 1943. Sincerely,

Mrs. W. S. Bosworth

How would you feel if our soldiers deserted in face of the enemy?

You are guilty of this crime when you cash your war bonds and certificates when no dire necessity exists for doing so.

Editor Solved Problem Of What To Call Copy Girl

A few weeks ago the first copy girl joined the staff of the Minneapolis Star Journal. Editors, who were used to bawling "Bo-o-o-y!" when they wanted a story on a headline hustled to the composing room, didn't know at first just what to call Copy Girl Barbara Rexford. Then one of 'em hit on a happy solution, and catching himself suddenly, he shouted "Miss Bo-o-o-y!" and "Miss Boy!" she's been ever since.

Proper Nutrition Is Health Ammunition
Canadians Are Told As Campaign Begins

The Canadian Nutrition Program is underway, and all through the country people are giving more thought, to the food they eat because they know that "Proper Nutrition is Health Ammunition."

People have become vitamin and mineral conscious in the last few years, realizing the importance of these substances to general health and fitness. They sometimes forget, however, that calories too, are important.

Just as cloth is measured in yards and water in gallons, food is measured in calories, or the amount of heat and energy it produces in the body. Foods vary greatly in caloric value. Fats ranks highest, followed by sugar and starches, while most fruits and vegetables, which contain large amounts of water have a low caloric value. People do not all need the same number of calories for individual needs vary with activity, age and other factors. The more physical work done the faster energy is burned up and the need for more calories increases. Every one needs more calories in winter than in summer, for the body has to produce more heat to maintain normal temperature with the thermometer at zero.

The wise meal planner, says Nutrition Services, is choosing her calories for the company they keep. In other words she plans to get a larger proportion of calories from foods which also contain the protective minerals and vitamins. Cheese, whole grain cereals, Canada Approved Bread and potatoes, cooked in their skins are examples of foods in which calories keep company with protective elements.

"Yep, I had a beard like yours once, but when I realized how it made me look I cut it off."

"Well, I had a face like yours once, and when I realized that I couldn't cut it off, I grew this beard."

"You bet. Found a place where none of the women had more than two gowns. She had three."

Household Hints

Sheets Will Wear Longer If Given Careful Attention

Consumer Information Service gives seven ways to make sheets last longer.

1. Beds should be made properly. Edges smoothed under the mattress get less abrasive wear than bunched under edges.

2. Sheets should not be yanked off the bed but should be loosened all around the edges first.

3. Mattress pad should be used between sheet and mattress.

4. Sheet should be reversed every other time used, putting bottom to top to distribute wear.

5. Bare springs should be covered with heavy cloth so that when sheets are tucked under the mattress the springs will not cause abrasive action against sheets.

6. Sheets should be washed as soon as possible after use. Oils and acids present on the skin's surface shorten the life of sheets.

7. Sheets, or pillow cases, should never be used for laundry bags.

Canadian Girl Guides

Pictures Of Guide Life Wanted From All Parts Of The Dominion

The Provincial Office has received a request from the Head of Publications, Canadian Girl Guides, Toronto, asking for pictures of Guide life from all parts of the Dominion. Snapshots showing camp life, training or teaching of the tests, have been specially asked for, and the snaps should have a clear, glossy finish. Any pictures showing Brownies, Guides or Rangers in action, either indoors or outdoors, will be most acceptable and Guides are asked to send their contributions to the Saskatchewan Headquarters, 1923 Hamilton Street, Regina.

In view of the increased difficulty in obtaining supplies the Stores Department in Toronto has issued an appeal to all Guides throughout Canada for their co-operation and understanding in any slight delays which may arise in the filling of orders. The manufacture of insignia from metal has now become impossible and it has been suggested that each Company and Pack salvage any unwanted Tenderfoot or Recruit Pins belonging to members of their own company for future use. Economy and thoughtfulness in this connection will be of great help to the Stores Department and all Companies and Packs should make that one of their aims for the New Year.

The Saskatchewan office wishes to acknowledge the receipt of two quilts, one from the 9th Regina Company and one from the 1st Rose Valley Company, for shipment overseas. Miss Beatrice Milard, of the Fifth Lone Company, Ridgedale, has sent in two parcels of infant's clothing, and the 1st Yorkton Company has sent a splendid box of children's garments, which they collected at their Christmas party instead of giving presents to each other. All these contributions are gratefully acknowledged by the Packing committee.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

JESUS THE GREAT PHYSICIAN

Golden text: Wouldst thou be made whole. John 5:6.

Lesson: John 5.

Devotional reading: Psalm 116:1-8.

Explanations and Comments

The Cure at the Pool of Bethesda, John 5:1-9. In Jerusalem by the sheep gate there was a pool where the sheep destined for sacrifice were washed. Around the pool there were porches consisting of small compartments, covered overhead but open toward the pool. The pool was called in Hebrew Bethesda, which means House of Mercy. There the sick, the blind, the halt, the withered collected, hoping to be cured, and among them was a man who had been afflicted for 36 years. His trouble seemingly was paralysis. One of the Jewish feasts had brought Jesus to Jerusalem, and when he saw the man lying there he asked, "Wouldst thou be made whole?" Hast thou the desire to be made well? The man may have been there helpless for so long that he had lost all hope, and Jesus would first arouse his desire, his will. Or the man may have become resigned to his fate, and so used to the charity doled out to him that he wished nothing better.

"I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool," the man replied; "while I am coming, another stepeth down before me." It was evidently an intermittent spring, and according to popular superstition only the freshly bubbling water was headcent, and was ascribed to supernatural agency.

"Arise, take up thy bed and walk," said Jesus to the afflicted man. The bed was only a blanket, or a mat, which would be easily rolled up and carried. Sometimes it was only an outer garment. At once the man was able to do as Jesus bade.

Jesus Challenged Because of a Cure on the Sabbath, John 5:10-17. When the Jews told the man that it was not lawful for him to carry his bed on the Sabbath, he had the best possible defense: he who had made him whole had given the command to take up his bed and he had obeyed a greater than Moses was there. "Intuitively the man lays down the great principle of Christian obedience. If Christ be the source of life to me, he is also the source of law."

There has been no successful invasion of Britain since 1066; no civil war since 1660.

Recipe Of The Week

Save that cup of leftover applesauce from the breakfast table. It's just the ingredient you will need to add surprise flavor and extra moistness to those spicy All-Brain Cookie Jar Gems. Make three dozen gems at a time so you will have plenty on hand for tucking in school lunch boxes and serving the crowd when they come in hungry-as-bears from out-door activities. Here's the recipe:

ALL-BRAIN COOKIE JAR GEMS

½ cup shortening
1 cup sugar
1 egg
1 teaspoon soda
1 cup sweetened applesauce
1¼ cups flour

Bend shortening and sugar together. Add egg and beat well. Add soda to applesauce. Sift flour with spices and salt; add to first mixture alternately with applesauce. Add nuts and bran cereal. Drop by teaspoonfuls on greased baking sheet about two inches apart to allow for spreading. Bake in moderate oven (375 degrees F.) 15 to 20 minutes.

Yield: Three dozen cookies (2½ inches in diameter).

SANES OF HAZARD

By J. B. RYAN

CHAPTER II.

THE four men turned and followed Andre Ribott out of the cafe. They were not Kahiri, they were not Algerians. They were Frenchmen. They were the four men who had agreed that the quartet was the bodyguard of the fat little Frenchman. But the Kahiri were not native to Algeria. They were found in Tripolitania, on the other side of the Libyan border, fierce Berbers who acknowledged the rule of neither Italian nor Senussi. They were wild men, as dreamed as their cousins the Touaregs, but in Ain Safa they obeyed the orders of the equally despised French.

"The Kahiri intend to attack us when we leave the cafe," murmured Mohammed. "The whisper went through the coffee house. It is meddlin the Lawless had come to take from Sid Storey the money obtained from the sale of many sheep."

"You have your gun, Mohammed?" Storey asked.

The shepherd nodded, and a grin stirred through his beard. "I have a knife, also," he grunted. "The sid intends to fight? There are other Kahiri in Ain Safa, and if we should kill any of them we shall have to leave town on the fastest of canals."

"What is written is written," remarked Storey. "As soon as that waiter shows up we'll look home with Ismeddin and his desert gangsters. A moment later the thin-faced waiter shuffled to the edge of the table. Storey spoke.

"You warned me, monsieur," said the waiter. "You warned that supposed we card for you."

"A strange woman, monsieur," answered the waiter. "She intercepted me in the kitchen and offered me a handful of francs to show you. In such a manner that the other man could suspect nothing, what she had written on the card."

"What did she look like?" "She was young. More than that I cannot say, since she was covered from head to foot in a dark baracca. She was gone when I returned to the kitchen, but I think she was a girl of the founti—a Franzise."

STOREY tipped the waiter and dismissed him. This was a four-sided drama, with parts seemingly unrelated. What connection could there be between Andre Ribott securing meat for Hungry France, Jack Storey trekking across the desert to return to his native land, the fierce Berbers from Tripolitania and this unknown girl who had come out of nowhere?

"Shall we go, Mohammed?" suggested Storey.

The shepherd loosened his cloak, exposing belted knife and gun, rose with Storey and stepping with his friend and former employer to the door and out of the cafe.

"Let us go this way, sid," Mohammed bin Mulai took the lead. "It is longer, but in a direction where the Kahiri are least liable to be lying in ambush."

The course of the shepherd was the sanest procedure. Yet as he moved in the wake of his cloak-dressed companion Jack Storey half-wished that the encounter with Ismeddin and Ribott would be precipitated. If Mohammed led him safely through the tortuous streets to the hotel and they were able to steal undetected out of Ain Safa, which was undoubtedly the next step on the shepherd's program, the American might leave Africa with all this mystery unexplained.

MOHAMMED stooped so suddenly that Storey's boot struck against the slipped heel of the guide. The Moslem was peering ahead into the gloom. "Did you hear anything, sid?" he whispered.

The street had narrowed to such an extent that jutting balconies of opposing buildings had transformed the thoroughfare into a tunnel. Out of the darkness came the rattle of a lone cobblestone. More and more it tensed against the nearest wall, and then the shadows under the balconies condensed into darker shapes, a blot of men moving through the street.

"The Kahiri!" Mohammed whirled silently in his tracks, dragging at the cloak of Storey. "Hurry, sid, before they see us."

At the first winding corner the street became another place of shadow and light. A half a block before his snarled oath could announce that they were trapped, silent figures had leaped beside Storey and the shepherd, dangers whipping from forearm-sheaths.

Mohammed had jerked out his own knife in time to block the blade that the shepherd, a darting body rammed against Storey as he attempted to draw his gun. Another Berber dove, jumping Storey against the building and over the sprawled man a knife rose. But before the weapon could fall, flame hit through the darkness and the man with the dagger collapsed beside Storey.

A heavy flung the clinging Kahiri clear, and as the American struggled with his feet a hand gripped his tunic sleeve. "Come, Monsieur Storey," sounded a tense whisper in his ear. "Come with me!"

STOREY had a momentary glimpse of a small dark-eyed face under the hood of a robe that gleamed in the shadows into which the slight figure was drawing him. Voice, face and form had been those of a woman, but the strength in the hand that clutched him was so near to being masculine that Storey found himself clear of the midline Kahiri and in a passage between buildings left to him could check his knife would be rescuer.

"Don't stop!" urged the girl, tugging at his arm. "If you are captured, monsieur, it means your death—"

"But Mohammed—" By main force, Storey freed his arm. "I can not leave him—he is in danger too."

"Monsieur—" Again the girl in the baracca caught him. "This time Storey could not break her clinging hold, but in spite of her hampering efforts, he gained the mouth of the passage."

The number of men in the street seemed to have increased, and shouts and commands had broken the silence. There was a light, also, gleaming not on knife-blades but on the duller metal of rifle-barrels.

"Get back!" a voice, held by hand and foot, slammed against the chest of Storey, pressing him against the wall. Two of the soldiers were looking the girl in the dark. The leader of the squad was kneeling beside a crumpled form on the cobblestones, the man who had been while attempting to knife Jack Storey.

The sergeant of police arose. "Shot through the head," he announced. He glanced at Storey, and Storey stooped again to pick up two pistols—the gun that had been knocked from Storey's grasp in the fight with the Berbers—and one other weapon.

Other than the one dead Kahiri, the soldiers and the prisoners, the street was empty. Ismeddin and the followers had disappeared. Gone, too, was Mohammed bin Mulai.

THE sergeant, finding that one of the prisoners had been pocketed, led the guns, then stepped closer to Storey. "Why did you kill this man?" he demanded in Arabic, then, getting no better luck at Storey's features, he shifted suddenly to French. "Mon Dieu! You are European—"

"Good thing you got here, Sergeant," grinned Storey. "After five minutes and those Berbers might have proven too much for us."

"Berbers?" The sergeant stared blankly, then glanced up and down the deserted street. "There is only one man here. We saw no one else—just you and this girl and the man you killed."

The girl spoke. "There were at least six others, monsieur. They must have fled when they heard you coming. It was I who sent you the message informing you that a man in the cafe of Amar ben Yusuf was in danger."

"It seems that we came too late to save him," commented the non-com. "Monsieur—mademoiselle, you are both under arrest. Monsieur Storey, whom I wanted you to protect—"

The sergeant shrugged. "We heard no struggle in the street. We heard only the one pistol shot, and when we arrived an instant later we found this dead Arab with you and this Monsieur Storey beside him. This is murder, mademoiselle. I must take you to the Commandante."

CHAPTER III.

THE hood of the barracan had fallen back, revealing the coal-black hair of the strange girl. As Jack Storey obtained his first full glimpse of her flawless features and pale olive complexion, a sudden lunge on the part of the girl broke the grasp of her two captors.

"No, no!" she cried, plunging blindly through the gathered soldiers. "You must not hinder me—"

But the police were so many. An arm whipped out, and the girl was made prisoner once more.

The sergeant grunted. "You do not wish to appear before Captain Lebeau?" Then you were surely responsible for the death of this man!" "I did not kill him." The girl had forced herself into a measure of composure. "For that matter, did Monsieur Lebeau?"

The non-com gestured to his men. "Come. The Captain can question these people."

Jack Storey fell in step with the girl as the couple were marched down the street. "Do not be alarmed, mademoiselle," he tried to reassure her. "The officer in charge of Ain Safa will be just. We shall be free as soon as a few routine details are complied with."

The starlight through her white teeth as the girl attempted to return his smile. "Oh Monsieur Storey," she murmured, "why did you not remain in the coffee-house until the police arrived? Then I would not be in this predicament—"

"But we can hope that Ismeddin was bent on robbery—"

"I suppose so," her voice sank lower. "You will go free, but I—"

She took advantage of a narrowing of the street to press closer to him. "Monsieur Storey," she whispered, "I tried to save you from Andre Ribott. Would you help me in turn by stating that I am your sister? It may not work, but if I can keep my identity secret—"

"But I have no sister," he began, then checked himself. "Of course, mademoiselle. What is your name?"

"Annette," she told him. "That much of my right name will arouse no suspicion if you do not fail me."

THE conversation was ended by their arrival at the tall building that was the headquarters of the Spanish. The commander of the garrison, Captain Lebeau, was at his desk. The captain heard the report of the sergeant, wrote the names of John Storey and Annette Storey in a ledger, then informed the prisoners that the case would be dealt with in the morning. Algeria being a part of France and the death of a native of Ain Safa receiving the same careful consideration and investigation as a killing in Paris itself.

Annette's disappointment over their detention was such that Storey, seated in the cheerless room that was his cell, was inclined to the belief that the girl was in fear of the man. Yet she had risked exposure to save him from the knives of the Kahiri. The least Storey could do was to keep up the pretense of a partnership, which, so far, had gone unquestioned.

However, Storey had reckoned without the efficiency of the French, even in such an unimportant post as the office of Ain Safa. The morning that followed a sleepless night was well advanced before the door of Storey's cell was unlocked. As he passed the guard down the corridor he counted Annette also being escorted to the office of Captain Lebeau.

"There is a slight irregularity here, Monsieur Storey," Lebeau studied a typewritten paper in his hands. "We noticed Gardunia last night, checking up on your story. Gardunia states that you lived in that vicinity for almost 10 years, ever since your now-deceased father came to Algeria to form a partnership in a sheep-raising business with Kaid Ibrahim. The enterprise was yours since the death of the Kaid three years ago. Recently you sold your sheep and lands and are now on your way to the United States."

The officer paused. "All this is true, Monsieur."

"That's my dossier," nodded Storey. "Now, about that Berber who was shot."

"One moment, please." Captain Lebeau held up a hand, his eyes still on the printed report. "There is also a description of you which seems to tally with your appearance. Height—one and eight-tenths meters; hair—dark brown; eyes—blue; cleft chin—moderate; nose—exactly straight. However," Lebeau looked over the top of the paper, "there is no mention of any sister."

Storey smiled. "Naturally, there would not be. Annette spent all her life in America. She was to meet me in Cairo, but could not wait and came on to Ain Safa instead."

THE Frenchman cleared his throat. "I have dropped his official attitude long enough to smile at the girl standing beside Jack Storey. 'I hope that also proves true. It grieves me to keep one so charmingly beautiful under lock and key. I would hate to send her to Algiers or to Vichy.'"

"What makes you doubt her?" demanded Storey. "I'll take all the blame for that street fight. She had nothing to do with it."

Lebeau explained. "Monsieur Ribott was with me when these reports came in. When it was disclosed that Monsieur Storey had no sister, Ribott suggested that I radio a description of the Mademoiselle to Biskra and Algiers." He glanced at the girl once more. "Algiers asks that you be held pending investigation. You are Annette Fournier."

To the eyes of Lebeau the girl remained unmoved. But Storey saw one of the small hands below the level of the desk clench involuntarily. Annette Fournier—the name meant nothing to Storey. But, noting the controlled face of the girl and the watchful gaze of the captain of the Spanish, he sensed that Annette Fournier must be a personage of importance.

"Well, Mademoiselle," queried Lebeau. "Are you Annette Fournier?"

"Nonnesse," Storey interrupted. "I have told you she is my sister."

"I am afraid we cannot accept

YOUR unsupported statement, Monsieur Storey. If she is Annette Fournier, I shall lose my position if I allow her to go."

"Just who is this Mademoiselle Fournier?"

"A traitor to France," said Lebeau. "An agent of De Gaulle, the man who would create civil war in France. We are both French, Monsieur Storey. You know, yet in spite of that, Annette Fournier manages to flit from end to end of French Africa preying the gospel of revolt against the proper heads of the Republic. Already Vichy views her activities with anxiety."

"Monsieur le Capitaine," the girl approached the desk. "I shall tell the truth. I am Annette Fournier."

"There was a short silence. You know what this admission means, Mademoiselle," Lebeau asked gently. "The law against the adherents of the rebel De Gaulle is harsh even in its most lenient part."

"It means at least prison and perhaps since I have caused considerable trouble, perhaps death," nodded the girl. "I am both French, Monsieur Storey. You are, I gather, loyal to Vichy. Each of us, in his own way, has the interests of our stricken country at heart. She leaned over the desk-top. "Alions," she hummed, "enfants de la patrie when shall we hear that in Paris once more, Capt. Lebeau?"

THE muscles tightened about the Fournier's jaws. "Do not play upon my sympathies, Mademoiselle. I made my decision when France fell. I believe that Petain, and not De Gaulle, is the man who will bring our country safely out of the mad-dream of the world has become."

"I am not asking you to transfer your own counsel," she said. "It is not possible for you and me, followers of rival factions, to work together in the behalf of the France we both love." She turned to the girl. "I am not asking you to transfer your own counsel, Monsieur Storey. I am not asking you to transfer your own counsel, Monsieur Storey. I am not asking you to transfer your own counsel, Monsieur Storey."

"He is not going to Touggourt," the girl said. "He is taking the sheep into Libya. Can you not see it, Monsieur? Why should Ribott be in Ain Safa, so close to the border? Why should the man who guarded the sheep be Kahiri, men not of Algeria?"

Lebeau shook his head. "Monsieur Ribott allowed me to examine his papers. There is no reason to doubt his integrity, Mademoiselle. He is a representative of the French government."

"Monsieur!" pleaded Annette Fournier. "Hear me! It is true that a man named Andre Ribott was sent to Algeria to buy food for France, but it is a different man who now goes under that name. This man whom we know as Andre Ribott may be French, but he is a renegade. He is neither loyal nor free French. He is using the money and the authority of the real Andre Ribott to round up sheep to be turned over to the Italian and German army in Libya."

Captain Lebeau said thoughtfully. "If this man is a masquerader, where is the real Andre Ribott?"

"A man was killed in Bou Saada, the town where Andre Ribott was to begin his purchases. He was unknown, and remained unidentified because his features were washed in. Yet a general description of the dead man tallies with that of the man I suspect of having taken his place."

"Suspect?" repeated Lebeau. "Then you cannot prove your charges, Mademoiselle."

"Not yet," she admitted reluctantly. "I have traced this Ribott across Algeria, but so far his actions have been what we would expect of the man he pretends to be. But it is in Ain Safa that he must show his hand. You say he departed this morning, Captain. Would you send out a detachment of your police to see whether he has in truth gone toward Touggourt or turned east toward Libya?"

"This is no trick, Mademoiselle Fournier? You lied to me in the beginning."

ANNETTE'S vice became more persuasive. "What have you to lose, Monsieur le Capitaine? I am your prisoner. You will be commended for capturing Annette Fournier. Think of the further glory that will be yours if to that exploit you add the feat of frustrating the designs of the traitor Andre Ribott. He is not that the sheep are destined for the Germans—which would not disturb certain elements in Vichy—that you must consider. But your countrymen and mine are waiting for food."

The French officer turned his head. "Storey, Jarid," he addressed the non-com at the door. "Ride out of town with your men and learn for me just where Monsieur Ribott has gone with his sheep."

The sergeant touched his hat and departed. Lebeau then nodded to the nearest of the native guards

"You will conduct Mademoiselle Fournier back to her cell."

As the girl turned toward the door, Jack Storey was about to follow when the captain remarked: "Not yet, Monsieur Storey. You will remain for a further word with me." (To Be Continued)

Women's Naval Service

The Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service In Need Of Recruits

The Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service is actively recruiting Canadian women between the ages of 18 and 45 in 22 different categories. Girls with training and experience will find no difficulty in choosing work for which they have been fitted. In the case of younger women just out of school, the service offers ample opportunity to pick work for which they have a liking and aptitude. Advancement is progressive through the ranks, and depends entirely on the proficiency displayed and the individual's application to the work at hand. Most categories are divided into three classes and the daily rate of pay is increased as promotion for proficiency is made from one to another.

At the present time, the need is great for cooks and stewards. In the former category, any woman who has an aptitude for cooking but whose previous experience is limited, could be enrolled as a cook, and trained. Girls with previous employment in general domestic service are preferred, but those who are accustomed to housework and like it, can be trained to do this type of work. Living and working conditions are ideal at the Training Establishment at Galt, Ontario, to which the girls are drafted upon acceptance. The uniform allowance is very generous and the uniforms themselves are neat and becoming.

Information of any description may be obtained by applying to the W.R.C.N.S. Interviewing Officer, care of the nearest R.C.N.V.R. Divisions in this province.

Seek Wife Of Deceased Tailor

(Calgary Herald)

When Norman P. Eastwood, Coleman tailor, died on April 14, 1935, it was thought that he had never married.

Claimants to the estate of around $5,000 were two sisters and a brother residing in the United States, apparently his next-of-kin.

But the administrators of the estate found a marriage certificate among the papers left by the deceased and a further step in necessary litigation took place in supreme court chambers here to-day.

To Find Wife

Mr. Justice T. M. Tweedie adjourned an application by the sisters and brother of the deceased to have them declared next-of-kin for one year.

In the meantime, it will be the duty of the administrator of the late Mr. Eastwood's estate to continue enquiries respecting the whereabouts of the missing wife of the deceased.

If all efforts to find her result in failure, the estate will be distributed among the deceased's blood relatives.

Editor's Note Enquiry among several former intimate friends of deceased reveals that he was married in Idaho in 1900 or 1901. Mrs. Eastwood never did reside in Coleman though deceased resided here from 1918 till his death in 1935. Friends believe that his wife is dead though none can furnish proof.
